C5 heads inside Natural History Museum

Channel 5 has ordered a four-part series delving inside the Natural History Museum from The Garden.

Filmed from July to October, Natural History Museum: World of Wonder follows 300 scientists as they break new ground and prepare exhibitions at the world-famous museum.

Key highlights include principal curator of mammals Richard Sabin extracting detailed analysis from Hope, the museum's whale skeleton. The show will kick off next month.

"We've loved bringing the spectacular collections and other ground-breaking work to an audience, especially when we've been deprived of visiting it for so much of this past year," said The Garden specialist factual head Ninder Billing, who is exec producing.

"We hope the series is a joyful treat in the depths of winter."

Series producer and director is Luke Korzun Martin, with Ashok Prasad producing and directing. The show was ordered by factual commissioning editor Lucy Willis.
